Coordinated Vulnerability Disclosure (CVD, previously Responsible Disclosure (RD), is a way for a reporter and an organisation to work together. You report a vulnerability to Fontys. We get time to investigate and fix the issue. After that, you ay disclose the vulnerability publicly if you wish. This way, we improve digital security together.

How do I report a vulnerability?

- Stop testing and do not continue collecting or viewing data.
- Report your finding via the Vulnerability Reporting Form.
- Provide enough detail to reproduce the issue: the system's URL or IP, a short description, and the steps you took.
- Complex case? Attach a clear PDF with step-by-step instructions and (if needed) screenshots, and upload it with the form.
- Do not include personal data in your report (mask or anonymise it), except for your own contact details.

- In the form, confirm you agree to our CVD policy and consent to the use of your personal data to handle your report.

Our CVD Policy

What we expect from you

What is not allowed

What you can expect from us

We generally do not give physical rewards or money for reports. We do thank reporters with a mention on our Wall of Fame (if you want). In the form, you can choose to be listed and add a link to your LinkedIn or website.

Exceptions and special notes

- This policy is not an invitation to scan. Do not run broad or ongoing scans. Our Security Operation Center (SOC, our internal security team) monitors our network. Unnecessary scans create extra work and cost.
- Not allowed: attacks on physical security or on systems of other organisations, (D)DoS, social engineering, malware, spam, or any other harmful techniques.
- Anonymous reports are possible. If you report anonymously or with a pseudonym, we cannot keep you updated or make agreements about publication or recognition.
- Accepted risk (rare). In some cases, we may treat a vulnerability as a (temporary) accepted risk, for example, when fixing it would take far too much time or money compared to the impact.

Legal matters and the Dutch Public Prosecution Service (OM)

Some actions during security research can be criminal offences. If you follow this policy, Fontys will normally not take legal action against you.

The Dutch Public Prosecution Service (OM) looks at whether:

- Public interest: did your research help improve security?
- Proportionality: did you avoid going further than needed?
- Subsidiarity: did you use the least intrusive method?
